He said the accord covered only "steps considered necessary to further the search for peace in southwestern Africa," indicating that the agreement would not solve the con-flict itself but instead would facilitate further negotiations over it.

The news of the June revision drove the dollar sharply higher in Europe and New York and sent bond prices into a nosedive as markets reacted to the perception that tighter monetary policy — and thus higher interest rates - may be needed to rein in inflation. In New York, the dollar shrugged off central bank sales to soar to 1.8945 Deutsche marks at the close, from 1.8798 DM on Thursday, its highest level in a year against the West German currency. Against the yen, the dollar rose to 133.875 from 133.025. (Page 7). U.S. Treasury bond prices fell after the jobs announcement, dealers said. The benchmark 30-year bonds fell almost a point, or $10 for every $1,000 of face value, to 99 30/32s from 100 28/32s. That raised the yield to 9.13 percent

Special to the Herald Tribune BEIRUT - Outside the station house, civil war has raged for more than a decade. Rival militias have killed and kidnapped thousands and left the city in rubble. Inside, the policemen of West Beirut go about the business of policemen everywhere: car thefts, burglary, public brawls and the occasional family killing.

A large accountant's ledger sits on the desk in the office of the commander of a major police station in West Beirut. The commander runs his finger down last month's column: the police obtained a court order to evict squatters from a lawyer's office; an Egyptian woman reported a lost passport; a Sri Lankan maid was accused of stealing a gold bracelet, and the Beirut airport authorities were instructed to watch for her.

While the commander was talking, a junior officer rushed in to say that a fistfight had broken out at a gambling casino in an area known as Long Beach.

Computer problems delayed flights early Friday for about an hour at airports throughout New England and at facilities with flights destined for the region, officials said. The delays affected airports including Logan International Airport in Boston, Bradley International in Windsor Locks, Connecticut, and the airport at Portland. A 24-hour strike by crews at the Greek ports of Piraeus and Rafina prevented travelers from Athens from reaching the Greek islands on Friday. The strike was called by three unions seeking 22-percent pay raises, overtime benefits and tax concessions.

TALKS: Angola Accord Reached

tor of Namibia, and then would tell Cuba, Angola and the United States whether Pretoria formally accepts the Geneva agreement. It was unclear what the consulta-tions would cover. Mr. Pienaar is appointed by the South African government Officials from the four countries

The agency criticized industry's involved in the Geneva negotiations declined to comment on the talks or to explain their communique. A South African official noted earlier, however, that the government in Pretoria faced rightist opposition to its willingness to accept a cease-fire and to agree, even in principle, to an eventual withdrawal from Namibia.

The thorniest issue confronting Mr. Crocker as he shepherds Cubans, Angolans and South Africans through the negotiations concerns synchronization of Cuban troop withdrawal from Angola and South as many private economists have African departure from Namibia.

Cuba and Angola have demanded that South Africa grant swift independence to Namibia, as outlined in a 10-year-old United Nations resolution. But Pretoria has insisted that Cuban troops in Angola, estimated to number more than 40,000, must leave Africa simultaneously with the South African pullout from Namibia. In its offer announced Tuesday, ernment by June 1. But this would be possible, Mr. Botha said, only if Cuban troops have left Angola by the June 1 elections and if other conditions are met.

Despite the public proposal, South African officials have said that this dispute is likely to be tack-led only after other issues have been resolved, suggesting that long negotiations lie ahead. The South African proposal also said South African troops could withdraw from Angola by Sept. 1 if the cease-fire were in effect. South African soldiers have long been present in Angola, supporting the anti-government guerrillas of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola, UNITA.

Cuban forces have been stationed in Angola to bolster the Marxist government in Luanda in its war against UNITA, which also has been supported by the Reagan administration. For that reason Cuba and Angola have insisted that the Cuban presence be a matter between Luanda and Havana, unconnected to South Africa's relinquishing of Namibia In the talks mediated by Mr. Crocker, however, the issues have been linked at least indirectly, following Reagan administration policy that such linkage is necessary. A 14-point agreement in-princi-ple announced in July in New York In its otter announced a swift begin at the same time, but without cease-fire in Angola and elections for an independent Namibian government.

take charge of Mr. Busn's quest for the White House.

Mr. Baker's departure from the cabinet brings him full circle. The 58-year-old Texan ran Mr. Bush's unsuccessful drive for the 1980 Republican presidential nomination, then served as White House chief of staff in President Ronald Reagan's first term.

He moved over to the Treasury Department early in Mr. Reagan's second term.

"It concerns me that the Democratic nominee seems to have veered far outside that mainstream," he said in the speech to a Hispanic veterans' group, the American G.I. Forum.

He cited Mr. Dukakis's opposition to U.S. shipping escorts in the Gulf and his past support for the movement to freeze testing and deployment of nuclear weapons. His views, if implemented, would make the world not a safer place, but more dangerous," the vice president said. Although Mr. Bush's speech was one of the strongest of the campaign, his delivery did not stir the crowd of 1,500 people, who reacted with only polite applause. ■ Dukakis Calls for Debate

■ Bentsen Quits 3 Clubs A spokesman for Senator Lloyd

Bentsen of Texas said the Democratic vice presidential nominee was resigning from three exclusive clubs, two in Houston in one in Middleburg, Virginia.

At least two of the clubs do not have black members, but officials of all three said none excluded embership to any group. Mr. Bentsen "just felt it was the appropriate thing to do," said his spokesman, Jack DeVore.

The manager of one of the clubs, the Ramada Club in Houston, said Mr. Bush had been a member until shortly before becoming vice president. The manager described the club's membership as "mixed." A 1980 article in Houston City magazine, citing figures from a congressional committee, said the club had no black or female members.

WASHINGTON - The judge in the Iran-contra conspiracy case postponed on Friday the Sept. 20 trial date for Oliver North, the former White House aide, meaning that the first criminal trial resulting from the affair will not take place until after the Nov. 8 election. A public trial in the middle of the presidential election had been ex-

Gerhard Gesell, said he acted to give both sides more time to sort through the mass of secret documents collected by prosecutors. He did not set a new trial date.

And Now, the Trade Bill

by Congress and sent to President Reagan, what does it promise to do to, and for, American foreign trade? It will not force any radical change, but it will shift policy toward a more explicit emphasis on exgives the American president wider powers to retaliate against countries that close markets to U.S. exports. But the bill will make it harder for American companies to get protection at home simply because they cannot meet foreign competition.

The United States maintains the most open market of any large country. For a generation after World War II. it tolerated far less open markets in Asian and European countries because those countries were much poorer and were struggling to grow, and because America gave the highest priority to its military and political relations with them. All that, this bill announces, has changed. Japan and the European Community are now approaching the American level of wealth. They are economic powers on a global scale, and America is now going to press more systematically for access to their markets on terms similar to those that they find in the United States.

The most important provision of this bill is the authority for the president to engage in the current round of worldwide trade negotiations. The idea is to work out better and fairer rules among governments for trade, especially in agriculture, services and the high technologies — the areas in which the United States is strong and in which its its trade deficit without catastrophe.

A large bipartisan majority in Congress wanted more. It wanted a more consistent performance from this president and his successors. Sometimes the Reagan adminisports. Several foreign governments have called it protectionist. That is incorrect. It and sometimes, as in the cartelization of the and sometimes, as in the cartelization of the world steel industry, it has done just the opposite. Sometimes it ignored serious misbehavior by other countries because it did not want to jangle relations affecting military alliances and other diplomatic business. In this bill, Congress declares that this and other presidents have given away too much in the trade account for gains in the political account, and in the future the trade count is going to have to balance.

Lioyd Bentsen, who managed the bill in the Senate, did a skillful job, matched by his counterpart in the House of Representatives, Dan Rostenkowski. Early in the process they agreed that the bill was not to be loaded up with favors for constituents, protection for hard-luck industries or the usual assortment of gross giveaways. Along the way a number of protectionist horrors got voted into either the House or Senate bill, but, not entirely by accident, never in both. All but the most minor were scrubbed out in the conference, probably the most complex conference in congressional history. The two managers had a lot of intelligent help, at the Capitol and from the administration. But they get the primary credit for successfully bringing the bill back by a long and winding route to their original purpose. — THE WASHINGTON POST.

Too Much Mud Too Soon

It is not as if the Democrats had not themselves set out to wage a very personalized, ad hominem campaign, featuring assault on the opponent's character as distinct from assaults on his policy preferences or intentions. Weakness, wimpishness of manner: The simpering, cowardly figure the Atlanta conventioneers so enjoyed invent-ing and calling Vice President George Bush made it pretty clear that the election would be fought out at least partly as a kind of exercise in competitive personality destruction. Which man could be made to look more pitiful and personally unfit for the office?

This is the context in which the current nasty piece of business about Governor Michael Dukakis's medical history takes place. The unfair taunts and tee-hees from Atlanta have scarcely faded, and now we hear the mean counter-rumble of - what else? anonymous rumors implying episodes of mental instability in Mr. Dukakis's past. President Reagan either stumbled or strode into the controversy and made one of his unfunniest jokes in recent memory about it, for which he (sort of) apologized later. Was this really inadvertent? Or were the Republicans trying to ensure that the subject got up there to the top of the news?

There are three questions here. One is whether there is really anything to all of this. Did Mr. Dukakis experience anything beyond the dejection that would be normal after the death of his brother or the loss of office? He says there was no more serious medical or emotional disability, and no evidence to the contrary has been produced either by those who have raised the question or those who have investigated it. If there is anything further it surely will come out.

A second question concerns what is proper and necessary so far as a presidential candidate's medical history is concerned. We would reject the suggestion that any consultation with mental health professionals disqualifies a candidate for president. But voters legitimately ask more of a president because of the enormous pressures on him. Health problems that might be tolerable in other officials are not accepted in a president. It is also legitimate to expect at least the level of medical disclosure that Walter Mondale provided in 1984 and Ronald Reagan and George Bush provided in 1980. After some initial hesitation, Mr. Dukakis has now met this standard.

The final question is just how dirty and personal this campaign is going to be. We do not say that questions of character and personal competence are unimportant. On the contrary, they are central to the voter's choice. They are, in fact, so important that they should not be buried in an avalanche of garbage and mud in a general contest to see which side can most thoroughly and unfairly destroy the reputation of the other's candidate. It is awfully early for this to happen in the campaign. That may be good news. It is early enough to be stopped.

— THE WASHINGTON POST.

No Holiday for the Banks

"The worst is over," says William Seid-man, chairman of the Federal Deposit In-ton properly fears the shock waves that surance Corp., after bailing out yet another Texas bank. But that refers only to bank failures. He estimates that $50 billion is needed to rescue insolvent savings and loan institutions - and counting. Every month that goes by without a remedy raises the bill, he thinks, by another billion.

There is little public sympathy for freewheeling bankers who plunge into disaster. but there is now no sensible alternative to tapping the Treasury for direct federal aid.
The center of trouble is the Southwest, where the oil business took a nosedive and then real estate loans began to sour. Some say this is what the Sun Belt deserves. They remember the Texas bumper stickers during the oil crises of the 1970s: "Let the Yankees freeze in the dark." But starving the North of petroleum was unthinkable. So is permitting the collapse of troubled banks and thrifts. The latest bailout saved First Republicbank, the largest in Texas. With a $4 billion assist from the FDIC, control has passed to NCNB Corp., an aggressive bank holding company that started as the North Carolina largest U.S. banking company and No. 1 outside New York and California The FDIC's infusion is second only to the $4.5 million that it pumped into Chicago's failing Continental Illinois Corp. in 1984. As in Chicago, First Republic's depositors are ton properly fears the shock waves that would follow if, when a major bank is involved, coverage were limited to the standard $100,000. There is no insurance for stockholders, though, and in the Texas case there is no special priority for bondholders, either. Although banks are still failing at the same rapid clip as last year, the FDIC's $16 billion reserve is considered adequate. Not so that of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., despite an $11 billion expansion last year. Estimates of the cost of closing or merging America's 500-odd in-solvent savings and loans banks are all over the lot; the Treasury says $30 billion, Mr. Seidman says $50 billion and outside authorities go as high as $100 billion. The FSLIC is sustained by an extra levy on healthy S&Ls, but they cannot carry this load and stay healthy for long. The only realistic alternatives are to merge the two federal insurance agencies, which would put a strain on bank insurance, or to dip into the Treasury. The Reagan administration argues that taxpayers shouldn't have to pick up the tab for mismanaged S&Ls. That may sound good in an election campaign, but remember Mr. Seidman's figure for the price of stalling. By Election Day, the cost to taxpayers will have gone up $3 billion more. One day, Washington will have to pay. The only questions are sooner or later, and less or more. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Corking the Chemical Bottle

For the last four years 40 nations have been talking in Geneva about an American idea to ban the production and possession of chemical weapons. The talks have made little progress, but the problem that they are meant to address has meanwhile grown. The Iran-Iraq war has seen battlefield chemical weapons used to a larger extent than at any time since World War I. But even when Iraq killed 4,000 of its own citizens with a chemical attack on a Kurdish village in March, the world response was remarkably muted.

Some thoughtful people find great cause for worry in this seeming indifference. The Gulf war has provided proof that chemical weapons can be made cheaply and used effectively, with virtually risk-free political consequences. That could increase their appeal, particularly to poorer countries.
"The genie," one U.S. official warns, "is now out of the bottle." So it would seem. - The Los Angeles Times.

OPINION

Change in Russia: Gorbachev's Real Struggle

PARIS — In foreign policy, Mikhail Gorba-chev can act with decision and effect. In domestic affairs he cannot. It is important for the Western powers to respond to what he can do rather than to what he cannot

For example, the Soviet leader proposed last week to decollectivize agriculture, 60 years after Stalin collectivized it at the cost of famine and millions of human lives. His plan was put to a meeting of the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party, but when the final resolutions of the meeting were made known July 30, agricultural decollectivization was not among them. Mr. Gorbachev wants to rent land back to peasants on leases of up to 50 years. He told the Central Committee that this was necessary because of the sorry state of Soviet agriculture. Seventy years after the Revolution (when Russia was an agricultural exporter) the Soviet Union cannot provide its people with "reasonable dietary norms." he said. There are "real possibilities" of doing so by 1990 in bread, cereals, potatoes, vegetables, oil, milk products, eggs and chicken. Meat and fruit are another matter. The people will have to wait longer for "reasonable" supplies of them.

This is a mad situation, but the very enormity of its senselessness testilies to how hard it is for the Soviet Union to change. A huge bureaucratic, human and ideological investment has been committed to an apparatus of collectivized agriculture and to a centrally planned and commanded industrial system, neither of which work.

The assumptions behind this are hardest of all to change. Even as he described the fiasco of collectivized agriculture, Mr. Gorbachev had to say that turning land back to the peasant "is the truest socialism because it puts man in the front rank," and to call collectivization an "historic accomplishment of the Soviet people."

Foreign policy can be changed by fiat. Mr. Gorbachev's foreign well-wishers should understand the difference between what he can do at home and what he can do abroad. The discussion one sometimes hears in the United States about whether Washington should "help" him often risks fatuity. It certainly is beside the point, given the scale of the Soviet Union's domestic challenge.

On the other hand, the international situation can be changed dramatically for the better, and the Western powers currently are doing less than the Soviet Union to accomplish this.

In foreign affairs, Mr. Gorbachev has moved decisively on arms control in Europe and to reduce medium-range nuclear missile deployment. He has ordered the army out of Afghanistan — without pretending that it has been anything other than a big and bloody failure of Soviet policy making.

By William Pfaff

The Soviets are moving to settle the Angolan war. Mr. Gorbachev has told his Ethiopian clients that a political settlement is necessary in Ethiopia's war with Eritrean rebels - a settlement that will give the Eritreans a "just solution." He has said to the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Arabs that a political solution must be found in the Middle East, and he is renewing relations with Israel to assure that Israel does not have only the Inited States as a superpower interlocutor. His foreign minister. Eduard Shevardnadze, says that "a chain reaction" of regional conflict settlements will follow the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan.

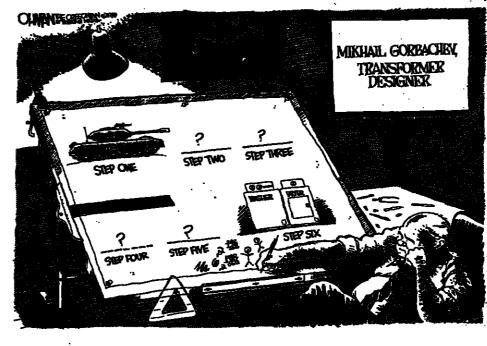

Mr. Gorbachev has told his military that "sufficiency" is now the rule. It is now known that two years ago (in May 1986) he ruled that the Brezhneyears ago (in May 1960) he ruled that the Brezhne-vian "strategy by which the Soviet Union must be stronger than any potential coalition opposing it" was contrary to the national interest. "We cannot give ourselves the luxury of copying the United States, NATO and Japan in all of their technomilitary innovations," he said. He acknowledged that a policy of matching any possible coalition, much as the military may like it, is self-defeating in that it provokes each individual rival to attempt to match, if not surpass, Soviet strength, in an endless process that settles nothing. There is in all of this a quality of magisterial common sense, previously wholly absent from Soviet policy, and rare anywhere. It makes urgent common sense for the West to respond to this outbreak of sensibleness while it lasts — and pray that it will last. These intrinsically stunid, futile that it will last. These intrinsically stupid, futile and tragic African wars must end. Something must be settled in the Middle East to stop the downward spiral of events there. With Mr. Gorbachev in the Kremlin it even becomes imaginable that we might ask what the Cold War itself is now about. Why are we, and they, doing these things to ourselves?

Behind Mr. Gorbachev's actions is a reassessment of where the Soviet Union stands in history. Stalin said that war with the capitalists was inevitable. Nikita Khrushchev and Leonid Brezhnev said it would be waged by way of the so-called libera-tion struggles of the Third World. Mr. Gorbachev recognizes that the real struggle for the Soviet Union is simply to survive as a serious nation.

Give the IMF 'Gnomes' a Go at Moscow

C OPENHAGEN — One great advantage to the initiation of glasnost in the Soviet Union seems to be that one can now address the problems of that country quite frankly, without giving offense. This could prove beneficial to the Soviets in many ways, but perhaps chiefly in the economic sphere.

Mikhail Gorbachev has announced extensive changes in the fabric of Soviet society. His prospects of success, and even survival, depend on his ability to produce quick results. Since, it seems, most people in the West would dearly love Mr. Gorbachev to succeed, it is being suggested that the West devise ways to assist the Soviet leader. The most common suggestion is that he should be given, or lent, facilities to fill the shelves in Soviet shops with high-quality, Western goods.

But filling shelves with Western merchandise is no remedy for the ills that have plagued the Soviet Union for years. Despite great natural riches, that unfortunate country has consistently proved incapable of feeding its people and of manufacturing any-thing but military and space hard-ware and the shoddlest of goods at appallingly high costs.

The reason might be that Russians are bad workers with no industrial traditions. But Russian émigrés have prospered in other lands, and before the Revolution there was steady economic progress. Since the Russians have contrived to build the most inefficient economic system ever imposed on any civilized nation, the only remedy would seem to be to eliminate that system at their earliest convenience.

By Ole Bernt Henriksen The writer is a Conservative member of the Danish parliament.

But how to go about it? Speaking frankly, what is probably needed is for the "gnomes" of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to descend upon the Soviet Union and do what they are wont to do to mismanaged economies in Latin America. The ruble should be devalued and left to float against other currencies. All subsidies, including the subsidy for bread, should be immediately done away with, and wages should be frozen for a prolonged period. Factories should be sold off, and the hopelessly uneconomical ones allowed to perish. The viable factories should be permitted to buy and sell as they saw fit, and to retain all foreign earnings. The same would apply to agriculture ("All soil to the peasants!"). Trade and commerce would have to be immediately liberalized, even for venturesome foreigners. After that cure, which need not take all that long, there would be grain, raw materials and energy available for export, and the gnomes might recommend an injection of foreign capital in the form of loans — say, $50 billion, a fourth of which could go to shelfstocking, because the Soviets, if they are supposed to work. must have some carrots after the stick.

The depreciated ruble and the wage freeze should prevent a run on the shelves, and the surviving factories would try to compete, having greatly mended their ways. This might take a vive, but Mr. Gorbachev could announce that reform had taken the Soviet Union all the way to the abundance that communism has always promised. For, being so vastly rich in resources, the country would recover quickly. In the long run the country would enjoy the advantage (over Japan) of having acquired an entirely modern production apparatus, in lieu of the scrapped one, which was obsolescent when acquired.

Mr. Gorbachev might survive. What threatens him, mostly, is not the opposition but the impatience of the people if he proves unable, or too radical, to really change the country. He may know this, and for the duration of the hardship he can always blame the gnomes, who are there to be blamed. Also, the West should and probably would be nice to Mr. Gorbachev, for the Soviet market for soft drinks, hamburgers and blue jeans is most attractive, and the doorway to the European Community would stand ajar, if only to ensure that the Soviets and the Americans do not gang up against Western Europe.
Other approaches may be more likely than the right one - such as a new Marshall aid project and reckless lending. But the gnomes should have a go at the Soviet Union. Unlike the Latins, the Russians may come to like them, since they have experienced things far worse than a little dose of IMF-World Bank healing.

The reply was that if the local party leader failed to win the required "confidence vote." he would have to resign. But who would dare, in a remote village in Siberia or Kazakhstan, to vote against the party leader?

It happened because reform is finally focusing on the core of the system — the party itself. It has become increasingly clear that so long as the party bureaucracy remains untouched, no significant headway is possible. Apparatchiki, if they lose their party jobs, have nowhere to go - hence their resistance to change.

Clearly, this is an extraordinary solution for extraordinary times. It cannot be a model for the broader political system of a socialist society. Yet this approach seems not to have been viewed as an exception. The conference decided that the party leader at each level should be nominated automatically to head the local soviet. This presents us with a sweeping top-to-bottom merger of party and state leadership. Romania is the only socialist country to have experienced such a merger in recent history. As a Romanian Marxist I am amazed that reformers in Moscow should want to emulate that model. There was no discussion of this in suggest also talking about the known steps that could be taken to bring about peace with Israel? One person! The Palestinians will not be able to evade this question forever, for a simple reason. In the end, it will be Israelis, not Americans or Russians or Saudis, who can make the decisions that can fulfill any Palestinian aspirations - how much territory to give up for peace, at what rate and under what conditions.

And the PLO understands full well the great obstacle to Israel giving up anything or making any arrangement; despite the yearnings of its own people for a taste of peace at last. It is the conviction of so many Israelis that the PLO will never give up its sworn goal of wping out Israel entirely.

The PLO has consistently refused to take some obvious steps that could begin to persuade Israelis that agreements with the PLO are not a contract for Israeli suicide.

The PLO refuses to alter its own covenant, which calls for unending war against Israel by all methods until the destruction of the Israeli state. Foreign sympathizers of the Palestinians keep saying well, you know, the PLO doesn't really mean it anymore. And wouldn't all that be terribly difficult right now, when Palestinians of the uprising are so hot against Israel? Exactly. In private and public men and women of the uprising say clearly that their final goal is to rule over all of Palestine, including and particularly what is now Israel.

For the sake of Palestinians, their not too much of a price for the PLO, if it really wants an agreement with Israel, to begin by rewriting the charter that screams for the death of Israel. Palestinians should be urged to tell their people, plainly and repeatedly, that the time for holy war is over and the time to wage holy peace is at hand. To persuade Israelis, the PLO must also fully accept the United Nations resolutions that reaffirm the existence and security of Israel as well as Palestinian rights.

And then, with Palestinian support, the United Nations should rescind its vicious resolution of 1975 equating Zionism, the belief in a Jewish homeland, with racism and denouncing it as ' a threat to world peace.

These are substantial demands, but only if hate of the very idea of Israel is regarded as normal and acceptable. Demands that Israel deal trustingly with an enemy sworn to its elimination are much greater. What's more, they lack plain common sense and a human understanding of what a beleaguered people will do and what it will never do.

Israelis will make peace; they will not do so with those who still preach their destruction and live in hating anticipation of it.

That is reality, staring at us all Turning away from it, as the worldlikes to turn from realities, keeping up the pressure on Israel without pressuring the PLO to create the emotional condition for peace, if it wishes peace - that will not make reality go away. One day, another PLO conclave will face it, perhaps. That would be a fine day for Israelis, for Palestinians, for each person who prays for an end to the bitter decades they have endured. The New York Times.

Use May Spread

By Bernard E. Trainor
New York Times Service WASHINGTON — U.S. military officers say Iraq's routine use of chemical weapons against Iran in their eight-year war could encourage the common use of poison gas in future wars between Third World nations.

over the use of chemicals in the war, the first widespread use since World War I, may be seen as tacit repudiation of an international agreement ontlawing chemical warfare, the officer said.

On Monday, an independent team of experts appointed by the United Nations issued a report accusing Iraq of using chemical weapons on an "intense and frequent" scale against Iran in the Gulf War. Iran accused Iraq of two more attacks this week in which, it said, 2,700 people were wounded.

Iraq first began extensive use of chemical warfare in 1983, when its Iraq's chemical warfare. army was on the defensive and having difficulty stopping humanwave attacks by Iran's Revolution-ary Guards. "At first, it was an act of desperation," a U.S. general said. But as the war progressed, the Iraqis incorporated the use of chemicals in their artillery planning as a standard practice."

The general said the Iraqis, when defending against an Iranian attack, used persistent chemical agents, usually mustard gas, so the effects would linger and contaminate the areas through which the Iranians were attacking.

starts wondering what the art game he has been playing so long is all about - the purpose of the art itself and his ambiguous approach to it, which is first to desire it enough to buy it and then to quell that desire so as to be able to part with the briefly coveted piece.

When this soul searching is undertaken by Heinz Berggruen, the grand master of 20th century art dealing — who celebrates his 74th birthday by lending "The Berggruen Collection" to the Musée d'Art et d'Histoire through Oct. 30 - the result is gripping. Some 40 years of dealing, of which more than 30 were spent in Paris, give the best training and yield some convenient opportunities for getting the greatest. They make one acutely aware of the pitfall that the greatest collectors often have difficulty avoiding: ending up with 100 much dispensable art in the name of historical curiosity or simply to fill in gaps.

"As a dealer," Berggruen said this week, "I have seen so many great collections that nonetheless had their ups and downs, with rubbish hanging next to marvelous things. that it made me wonder whether it was possible to build up a collection in which none but the highest quality would be admitted."

Berggruen demonstrated that it was possible. Walking through the four rooms, and a few cabinets plunged in semiobscurity to protect the drawings, one is struck by the leanness of the show. Not only does the collector keep to his brief stick to the highest order - but, more importantly, there is nothing repetitive. Each of the hundred European works makes a point in marking out the itinerary that took Western art from the analytical perception of light in figural representa-tion to the dissolution of form into

This, too, is an Embiricos picture, bought in 1983.

From that portrait it was a straight path to Braque and Picasso. It is in Berggruen's choice of these two painters' works that the restraint of his taste comes out most. OF all the ways to adapt "Alice in Wonderland," the most perverse, it seems, would be to peel ck its genteel Victorian veneer. Without the story's decorum and fairy-tale disguises, the Hatter would seem dangerously mad, the Caterpillar would be a seductive snake, all of Wonderland would be haunted rather than fantastic.

That is precisely what Jan Svankmaier, a Czechoslovak animator, has done in "Alice," and though he strips away all sweetness and light, he does not violate Lewis Carroll's story. # Authors Finding FLEDAY, A Best-Selling Life withe Day of Re After Death

By Edwin McDowell
New Yark Times Service

NEW YORK — Placing greater emphasis than ever on their more profitable older books, U.S. publishers are reissuing or introducing the works of dead authors with greater regularity.

Just now, for example, summer and fall catalogues are heralding books by T.S. Eliot, Albert Schweitzer, C.S. Lewis and J.R.R. Tolkien, all of whom have been dead between 15 and 25 years. And "The Hero With a Thousand Faces," a Joseph Campbell book about mythology that Princeton University Press published in 1949, is No. 6 on the current New York Times best-seller list for nonfiction paperbacks. Within a few years, the Warner Books catalogue will trumpet the sequel to Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With the Wind," which on the basis of two completed chapters has already earned almost $10 million in domestic and foreign sales. While publishers constantly need new books and authors, older or "backlist," books account for well over half the annual revenues and profits for many publishing companies. They are less costly to acquire than new books because the publisher already owns them, and by definition they have withstood the passage of time and changing literary fashion.

Whereas editorial, publicity and promotional costs can be quite high for new books, backlist titles often need only a periodic face-lift, to give them a more contemporary

Each month, Bantam Books repackages one of its more than 100 books by Louis L'Amour, who died in June. His death probably created a demand for an additional million copies of L'Amour books, a Bantam official said.

Vintage is repackaging all seven novels by Raymond Chandler, who died in 1959. "Almost 30 years after his death, his estate is earning the kind of money every year that With its extreme close-ups, its most writers would be happy to earn at the top of their career," resents the Chandler estate. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich is repackaging its nine backlist books by T.S. ed Hobbit." It will also reissue a biography of the author and the third volume of the History of Middle-Earth series. Finally, it will publish a four-volume set of "The Hobbit" and "The Lord of the Rings" with new jackets in the cloth edition and new covers in the paperback edition.

Ballantine Books, which pub-lished "The Hobbit" and "The Lord of the Rings trilogy in paper-back in 1965, is also planning commemorative editions with new covers. In addition, it will publish the first mass-market paperback edition of "Unfinished Tales," edited by Tolkien's son, Christoplier, and will reissue four other works by Tolkien, a professor of Anglo-Saxon literature at Oxford from 1925

In recent years motion pictures and television have made best sellers of adaptations of novels, including novels by D.H. Lawrence and Evelyn Waugh. Little, Brown recently reissued Waugh's 1934 novel, "A Handful of Dust," to coincide with a movie based on the book. And it is the recent public television series of Bill Moyers interviews with Joseph Campbell, who died last fall, that put The Hero With a Thousand Faces" on the current best-seller list - and vaulted "The Power of Myth," the Doubleday book based on that series, to its current No. 1 position.

One of the best ways for an author to enrich his or ber literary estate, and a publisher's coffers, is to create a series of books with a memorable character, like Edgar Rice Burroughs's Tarzan, Erle Stanley Gardner's Perry Mason or Agatha Christie's Hercule Poirot

But what about dead authors whose books are popular yet whose output was comparatively scanty? Even there, imaginative publishers and literary estates, as in the case of the Margaret Mitchell estate, have found ways to keep the royalties rolling in.

Bantam Books arranged with the Goldsborough to continue Stout's fictional detective, Nero Wolfe; the third of those books. "The Bloodied Ivy." has just been will be pub-

The Day of Reckoning: Vision of Coming Disaster

By LEONARD SILK

New York Times Service EW YORK —A presidential election year is always a time for peering into the future, and everybody is doing it. Despite the current surge of the economy, highlighted by this week's jump in the leading indicators, the worry is that continuing federal budget deficits will undermine the economic growth.

In a forthcoming book, "Day of Reckoning: The Consequences of American Economic Policy Under Reagan and After," Benjamin M. Friedman, a Harvard professor, says: "Without economic growth, American society will ultimately lose its vibrancy, its dynamic sense of progress, its capacity to accommodate the aims and objectives of diverse groups with-in the population, its ability to offer such remarkable social mobility and individual opportunity. Without a strong and competitive economy, America as a nation will watch others take its place in the world order." He does not see this happening in a sudden, jarring crash, but slowly, steadily, over a period of years, unless the nation changes its unbalanced fiscal policy. He sees this not only as an economic imperative but also as a moral one. The saddest outcome of all," he wrote, "would be for America's decline to go on, but to go on so gradually that by the time the members of the next generation are old enough to begin asking who was responsible for their diminished circumstances, they will not even know what they have lost." In the current environment, good news arouses anxieties about bad news to follow. The economy's brisk advance, low unemployment and high rate of capacity utilization give rise to worries about inflation, rising interest rates and recession.

The recovery of the dollar awakens fears that the recent improvement in the trade deficit, chiefly a result of the dollar's earlier decline, will cause the trade figures to go into reverse and send the dollar sinking again.

OME economists say the dollar has been pushed up by the Reagan administration to give the economy a healthier appearance in this election year — to hold down inflation and inflation fears, to enhance the attractiveness of dollar assets and keep foreign capital flowing in and to reduce pressures on the and keep foreign capital flowing in and to reduce pressures on the Federal Reserve Board to raise interest rates.

The new trade bill, which President Ronald Reagan is expected to sign, is intended to widen markets for American goods, although some foreign officials and members of Congress fear that it may increase protectionism at home and abroad.

While the U.S. merchandise trade figures have improved, many economists are still fearful of the persistence of large deficits in the more comprehensive current account, which includes services and interest payments. C. Fred Revester director of the Institute and interest payments. C. Fred Bergsten, director of the Institute for International Economics, calls the current account deficit dangerous and wants urgent action.

What bothers Mr. Bergsten and virtually all other economists is that heavy U.S. borrowing from abroad is being used to finance high consumption, which it can no longer afford, rather than productive investment, which would spur economic growth and help keep America competitive.

But economists grow wary of predicting that disaster will strike at any particular time. Foreign capital still flows into the United States, sustaining the advance; when private capital inflow languishies, foreign central banks take over until it revives.

Americans are troubled by keeping their economy moving by selling their assets, but the alternative of living within their means still seems too painful, economically and politically.

Toyota, Motorola In Talks

Consider Link in Automotive Chips

TOKYO — Toyota Motor Corp., Japan's biggest automaker, and Motorola Inc. are discussing a link in the field of semiconductors for automotive use, a Toyota spokesman said Friday.

He said various possibilities were under consideration, including joint development of chips for use m auto parts. Industry analysts said such a link could create a foot-hold for Motorola in a sector U.S. companies have found difficult to penetrate.

"This has been one of the most recalcitrant sectors to date— they've been stonewalling the Unit-ed States," said Peter Wolff, senior analyst at Prudential-Bache Securities (Japan) Ltd.

A spokesman for Nippon Mo-torola Ltd., Motorola's Japanese unit, declined to comment on the Toyota statement or on a report in Nihon Keizai Shimbun that the two companies had reached an agreement to develop jointly custom integrated circuits by 1990.

Motorola would produce the chips and Toyota would use them as electronic parts in its own cars,

U.S. computer microchip makers have been eyeing the potentially lucrative auto-electronics market analysts said. The sector is the fastest growing in the auto parts industry and is expanding at a slightly faster rate than the total semiconductor market, they said. "For American penetration of the auto parts market, this would be an interesting and significant breakthrough," said Tony Moyer, auto parts industry analyst at SBCI Securities (Asia) Ltd.

Toyota's desire to build up its own auto electronics division could provide entry for a foreign chip maker into a field until now almost exclusively dominated by domestic suppliers, analysts said.

Toyota's interest in the field, where it has traditionally relied on firms such as the market leader, Nippondenso Co., stems from efforts to diversify into high growth sectors, Mr. Moyer said.

"Other Japanese car makers are trying to build up their auto electronics, but not necessarily by designing in-house," he said.

Facing runaway inflation and impatience from foreign creditors, the economic advisers of President Raul Alfonsin an-intended to slow inflation, extend efforts to open the economy, promote exports, and tives to limit price increases to a total of 4.5 crisis.

Parched Fields, Blooming Markets Futures Trading Climbs as Drought Nurtures Volatility

By Julia Flynn Siler

New York Times Service CHICAGO — In this city, where much of the U.S. supply of corn, soybeans and wheat is exchanged, the crowds packing the trading pits are just one sign of how the current U.S. drought has brought about a resurgence of the grain markets. Although some speculators have been hurt by the market's wild swings this summer, the boom in grain trading has proved a boon to brokerage firms, commodity fund managers and the Chicago Board of Trade, where the agricultural futures contracts are traded.

Trading volume in corn futures leaped nearly 63 percent in the second quarter from the first quar-ter. Volume in soybean futures climbed 48 percent, and trading in futures on soybean options soared

"The agricultural markets had been in the dol-drums for years," said Randall E. Sheldon, an agricultural economist at the Chicago Board of Trade. "Then, boom! Suddenly they shot up." The quick jump came for several reasons. For one thing, the drought in the United States, strong demand for American exports and the prospect of poor harvests in other parts of the world have raised concerns about tight supplies. As a result, big grain users, like food-processing companies, have increased their purchases of fu-tures contracts to lock in assured supplies at given

In addition, the higher prices resulting from others holding grain to sell futures contracts to lock in those prices. For example, a grain elevator operator who owns several hundred thousand bushels of wheat may decide to sell wheat futures to take advantage

Finally, traders are always attracted to a market in which there is price volatility, and the agricultural markets are no exception now. Such speculators try to make money by guessing the direction of prices and then buying and selling futures contracts accordingly.

Trading in agricultural futures had languished starting in late 1983 because of depressed farm prices and low volatility. Traders and investors moved to more lively arenas, like the stock index futures and Treasury bond pits. The Chicago Board of Trade lost nearly half of its 1,402 members to the Chicago Board Options Exchange, on which options on stocks are traded. Brokerage firms reduced or redeployed their agri-cultural staffs as well. And commodity funds lagged mutual funds in performance. The salad days began this summer. Indeed, the trading frenzy has produced one of the most hectic and profitable seasons in recent memory for brokerage houses, which earn commissions from executing trade orders.

"Our commission growth has paralleled the prowth in trading volumes this summer," said Patrick H. Arbor, a vice president at the Shatkin

Geldermann Inc., a large futures trading firm

Dollar Breaks Barriers as Economy Gains

NEW YORK — The dollar soared Friday, breaking several barriers and closing at its highest level in more than a year against the Deutsche mark, after the United States issued figures showing brisk gains in the number of Ameri-cans finding jobs in June and July. The figures suggested robust

U.S. economic expansion and fu-ture higher wage demands, imply-ing that interest rates might be raised to dampen inflation.

The overall U.S. unemployment rate for July was 5.4 percent, up from 5.3 percent in June, but the report by the Labor Department showed a gain of 283,000 nonfarm jobs in July, higher than had been expected.

The low volume was "one of the most striking things" about the market Friday, said Monte Gordon, research director at Dreyfus Corp. That means all the buyers were standing on the sidelines. Everybody just turned their back on the market." Broad-market indexes also fell. The New

Before the market opened Friday, the Labor Department reported that U.S. unemployment rose to 5.4 percent in July from 5.3 percent in farm payroll jobs, which was slightly higher than expected. This, combined with revised figures for June showing a 532,000 increase in non-farm payrolls instead of the 346,000 rise originally reported, renewed concerns about the pace of America's economic growth. The employment figures indicate "the economy is rumbling along at a pretty good clip," said Mr. Gordon.

These numbers reignited some of the fears that inflation will get stronger and the Federal Reserve Board will have to tighten credit, leadng to higher interest rates, Mr. Gordon said.

Jack Baker, head of equity block trading at Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc., said the emoloyment numbers could be interpreted as "a little inflationary after the adjustments of the prior month." William Tiritilli, vice president-research at Rodman & Renshaw Inc. in Chicago, said the rise in unemployment "was not really that dis-

Market participants were more concerned, he said, about the continuing gains in manufactur-ing employment, which grew by 68,000 jobs in July. The report fed inflation fears, in part because it indicated a move toward full employment and an increasingly robust economy. Niagara Mohawk Power was the most active NYSE-listed issue, off 1/8 to 131/2. Duke Power followed, up 1/8 to 45%. General Motors was third, ahead 1/8 to 781/8 in ex-dividend trading.

France Shrugs Off

French European affairs minister, was respond-ing to a call by Environment Minister Marilies

Flemming of Austria to boycott French cars.

"Don't tell me cars are to blame for pollution," said the French official in an interview with the business daily La Tribune de l'Expan

sion. "I don't see why leaves are falling off the trees in Germany and not in France. Pollution exists across the Rhine for other reasons, nota-

Late last month, France, backed by a domes-cut pollution by half on small cars by 1992.

France's main objection was a Dutch proposal for tax breaks on cars that conformed to the strict U.S. pollution standards. France feared the move could fragment the European market

But Mrs. Cresson backed Peugeot's position in the interview. "Tm not convinced that catalytic converters are the best solution," she said.

The research into clean engines by the French car makers is very interesting. Catalytic converters lose efficiency with use."

The chairman of Peugeot, Jacques Calvet, has criticised the devices, fitted either during or after a car's manufacture, because, he said, they

BOISE, Idaho — William M. Agee, who lost his job as chairman of Bendix Corp. after leading the company into a disastrous takeover battle in the early 1980s, was named Friday to head Morrison Knudsen Corp., one of the biggest U.S. engineering and construction companies.

Mr. Agee, 50, is taking over the titles of chairman and chief executive officer from William Deasy, 51, who will continue as president of the Boise-based company. Mr. Deasy also will return to the job of chief operating officer, a position he held before being elevated to chief executive.

Mr. Agee has been on Mor-rison Knudsen's board for 11 years. He left Bendix after leading an unsuccessful takeover bid for Martin Marietta Corp. in 1982 that ended with Bendix being acquired by Al-lied Corp. instead.

GM Plans 50% Cut in Number of Suppliers

ACME, Michigan — General Motors Corp. plans to cut the num-ber of its suppliers in half and will decide in the next six months which companies it will eliminate for contracts in the early 1990s, the automaker's supply chief said Friday.

Donald Pais, a GM vice president and head of its materials management staff, said that the company planned to reduce its 5,000 to 6,000 direct materials suppliers by 50 percent.

He added that within the next six months GM would firm up its sourcing decisions for 1991 models and decide which suppliers it would no longer retain.

"We're six months away from making the final cut," he said. Ford Motor Co. has told its suppliers that, unless they had won the automaker's "Q1" awards, which Rocky Mountains, the spokesman, set specific standards for cost, Jim Bailey, said on Thursday.

Swiss Insider Trading Is Now Illegal but Remains Alluring

ZURICH - When Peter Forstmoser, a Zurich lawyer, was hired last year to belp lay the legal groundwork for a corporate merger, he watched with chagrin as the stock price of one of the companies started to shoot up.

"There were six people who knew about the merger, and the stock's price kept rising," he recalled. "I got furious because I knew one of these five guys was playing a dirty game." What angered him was an apparent case of insider trading.

Until July 1, insider dealing by business executives, bankers, lawyers, accountants and Switzerland.

A law now bars the practice, but it has not ended the Swiss tradition of insider trading. business sources said.

"We condemn insider trading, but I think many who are in the position to make insider deals will do it," said Juerg Kurmann, executive director of mergers and acquisitions consultants AIM Group Zurich AG. "For the Swiss business mind, it has been a way of being clever, and you earn your money by being clever."

Rumors of insider dealing regularly surface. For example, shares of a machinery-maker, the Swiss financier Tito Tettamanti acquired a majority stake in March.

When you see such fluctuations, you have to markets into level playing fields in which insiders hold no great advantage over other investors majority stake in March.

believe insider trading is at work," Nicolas Baer, chairman of the Zurich Stock Exchange, said in a recent interview. He added that someone knew Mr. Tettamanti was going to buy the

Mr. Baer and other business leaders added, however, that the frequency of such cases often has been exaggerated in the media. Still, rumors of insider trading surrounded price gains in shares of Hasler Holding AG and Autophon AG just before the companies announced last year that they would merge to form Ascom Holding AG, Switzerland's larges telecommunications company.

In addition, registered shares of Sprecher & Schuh AG of Switzerland rose 40 percent in one month, just before it announced a reorganization in which it sold parts of the company to Alsthom SA of France in 1985. The company publicly denied insiders were at work.

On the other hand, last year's merger Brown, Boveri & Co. of Switzerland and ASEA AB of Sweden, to form the world's largest electrical engineering company, followed calm trading in both companies' shares.

But insider trading is increasingly viewed as a Adolph Saurer AG, climbed sharply just before distasteful way to make money, Mr. Forstunder cost pressures.

Companies are going to great lengths to protect sensitive information. "Now everyone is much more careful with confidential information," Mr. Forstmoser said.

He said that although the lure of easy money remains strong, the insider-trading law, which set fines of up to 40,000 Swiss francs ($26,000) and imprisonment up to three years for those convicted, will make potential criminals think twice before undertaking illegal trading. "Even if they are not morally convinced they should abstain, now I think it is too big a risk. The business community is watching to see how well the law will be enforced, executives said. Because cantonal authorities are responsible for enforcement, the zeal with which insider trading is investigated may vary from one part of the country to another, they said.

Mr. Forstmoser said he did not expect a large-scale crackdown on inside-trading in the near future.

"I do not think there will be many cases," he said, "but I do not think either that is a failure of the law."

He added, "I think that is maybe even the proof that it is doing the job correctly.

out formal mention of a European central bank. Mrs. Thatcher has rejected a bank's creation, asserting that it would mean "that you have to surrender any fundamental economic decisions to another coun-try. That I will not do."

Sources said that West Germaily, with its rigid anti-inflationary policy, is the country she has in mind. A formal link with the Bundesbank, which has succeeded in keeping inflation down, could lead to embarrassing swings in interest rates in Britain.

To assuage concern about its lack of enthusiasm for monetary cooperation, Britain made the "practical" gesture this week of is-suing debt denominated for the first time in Enropean currency units — a notional, intrabank package of 10 EC currencies, in-luding the pound.

Within Mrs. Thatcher's Conserister's failure to reappoint Lord Cockfield, one of Britain's commis-sioners of the EC and a leading architect in the creation of a single valive Party, questions are being raised about her European creden-tials. Is she being isolationist? asked Sir Anthony Meyer, a Con-servative, in the House of Com-European market, was officially attributed to the British peer's age and his having completed a full

Far from it, Mrs. Thatcher re-plied, adding that "it was this gov-ernment which actually got a chanfour-year term.

But the British press widely reported that the real reason for the nel tunnel started. If I may gently replacement of Lord Cockfield practical in making progress in the minister — was that he had "gone EC—first on their budgetary matters, secondly on sorting out the common agricultural policy and thirdly, during the presidency of this country of the EC, starting on the single market to be completed by 1992."

However, independent economists said that Britain's economy is now so heavily intertwined with the European market that London can ill afford to be out of step on the road toward a single market of more than 320 million people.
Roughly 47 percent of British trade is with the rest of the community, equivalent to about 12.5 percent of the nation's gross domestic product.

Conversely, Britain's resurgent economy is increasingly important to major powers in Europe, such as ble vis-a-vis the mark, perhaps best done through British membership in the EMS.

On the financial front, too, London's significance for Europe has increased. This is not only as a result of the Big Bang market re-forms of 1986, but also as a conse-quence of the pound having as-sumed the role of prime alternative to the Deutsche mark as a Europe an investment currency. Brendan Brown, a senior economist with National Westminster Bank PLC, noted that British investment in 1986 in the West German capital market reached 40 percent of the total, and repatriation of those funds in 1987 was the major factor behind weakness in West German equity and bond markets. The powerful Confederation of British Industry, an employers' group, has urged Mrs. Thatcher to overcome her fears about forfeiting soveriegnty to the Bundesbank and support EMS membership.

Mrs. Thatcher's penchant fo forthright views has won her a fair share of admirers on the Continent, however. Georg Grimm, an economic adviser to Mr. Kohl, said, "Margaret Thatcher guarantees for Europe that illusionary thinking does not pressil In a new she's does not prevail. In a way, she's something like a guardian angel.

"When Mrs. Thatcher says that whoever speaks of forming a cen-tral bank must accept a major diminution of sovereignty, she is absolutely right. The time is not right for that," Mr. Grimm said.

He added, "If you are going to abolish the role of the Deutsche mark and the British pound and later discover that what you've cre-West Germany. Bonn, according to West German central bank data, had its largest current account surplus in Europe with Britain, at 19 billion Deutsche marks ($10.1 billion) last year. West Germany has a key interest in keeping sterling status and people ought to be told what it means in terms of national

Mr. Grimm said that Mr. Kohl would nonetheless like Mrs. Thatcher to be "a little more Enro-pean-minded, more enthusiastic," baggage, the rage for order, of the evolutionary biologist.

"Some people like to speculate on what living things would look like on another planet," he writes, as if it is necessary to go to Mars to test whether there is a general pattern to life. A trip to Australia is all that is really needed, and it is a lot closer and considerably more hospitable than Mars. Australia offers a natural experiment, a continent isolated from others, stocked with a few odd pioneers [one assumes that Alcock is referring here to the animal inhabitants], and left alone for fifty million years." The surprising thing is that this book should prove to be so entertaining to the nonspecialist. Alcock, nicely self-ironic and blessed with a contagious sense of humor, wears his scholarship lightly. A recurrent theme in the narrative is his (and his g-suffering family's) adventures with the ancient Volkswagen camper purchased from a Monash colleague "despite warnings from other members of the Zoology Department that the campervan had been driven over unspeakable terrain during expeditions to the outback organized by its owner.

cock's prose, compounded of off-the-wall but consistently enlightening similes and a genuinely poetic touch. Attempting to depict for the American reader the little grass trees common in Queensland coastal forests, Alcock writes vividly, "I suspect that Dr. Seuss dreamed up grass trees. They are wildly unlikely plants with absurd tufts of long, grasslike leaves that arch out from the tops of skinny little trunks four to eight feet high. From the unruly topknot of greenery sprouts a thin stalk covered with thousands of tiny white flowers."

Of course, there is more to "The Kookaburras"

such as why kookaburras restrict their song primari-ly to the early morning or why the red-tailed black appreciation of bird-watchers.

It is true that in the course of our biological journey with him, Alcock takes us down some pretty strange roads: Why do male mallee fowls do all the work of nest-building and incubation while their mates laze about doing nothing? Why are certain members of nasute termite colonies sterile? What reproductive advantage derives from the flightlessness of the cassowary? Do we care? It is the triumph

Elizabeth Ward is an Australian-born writer and editor living in Washington. She wrote this for The

On another occasion Alcock took off for a month to Pearl Beach, a small coastal resort town north of Sydney, not to sport in the magnificent waters of the Pacific, but to carry out difficult and tedious field research on resin wasps. "A group of Aussies on their way to the beach stop and call up from the car to ask with justified bewilderment why on earth I have been perched on the rocky ledge beneath the boulder for the past several weeks. My answer, that I am studying the behavior of a local species of wasp that nests and mates on the rock face, seems to satisfy my questioners, or else to confirm their suspicions about Yanks."

Another source of unanticipated pleasure is Al-

A longtime Wrigley Field fan and a keeper of the flame for old-time virtues looked at it. "I hate it," he said. "It looks ries and polyester pants and plastic cars. Maybe that's progress. But it smells more of cash.

Television revenue from spon-sors for prime-time viewing of Cub games will increase initially. But management risks losing the dis-tinction and tinctive quality that has made the Cubs wildly popular, not only in Chicago — last year, for example, they drew two million fans for a last-place team — but also throughout much of the United States, which tunes in for day games on superstation WGN.

Regardless, on Monday night Wrigley Field will join the crowd. One after another, the ballparks have submitted to the dazzling blandishments of phony illumina-tion, with Crosley Field in Cincinnati in 1935 the first to see the light of night.

Briggs Stadium, now Tiger Stadi-um, in Detroit was the last previous holdour of the old ball parks, and it went bulbous in 1948. But Wrigley Field remained rooted in tradition and blissfully unlit. It stayed so mainly because its former owner, Philip K. Wrigley, of the chewing gum Wrigleys, considered baseball an activity best conducted under the healthful properties of the sun.

DETROIT - Alan Trammell drove in five runs with two doubles Thursday night as the light-hitting Detroit Tigers routed ace pitcher Roger Clemens and beat the Boston Red Sox, 11-6, ending the visitors' seven-game winning streak and regaining sole possession of first place in the American League East.

Clemens, who had been 10-0 on the road this season, lasted only 51/2 innings, giving up seven runs on nine hits. The Tigers had hit only 207 in their previous 13 games, scoring more than three runs in a Stewart's shutout by racing back and leaping above the wall to de-prive Steve Balboni of a homer. Then Ron Hassey beat out an infield single leading off the home seventh, advanced on a fielder's choice and scored the winning run on Terry Steinbach's double.

Orioles 5, Indians 0: In Baltimore, Mickey Tettleton doubled in two runs and scored one against Cleveland as the Orioles swept a threegame series for the first time since last August. All five runs were uncarned.

Twins 2. Blue Javs 1: In Toronto Allan Anderson pitched a four-hitter and Kirby Puckett homered for Minnesota. That made the Twins 30-25 on the road this year; they were 29-52 in 1987 en route to winning the World Series. (AP, UPI)

World-Class Tastings

By Frank J. Prial New York Times Service

PARIS — This is the time of year when the world's most passionate, and affluent, wine collectors begin to announce their upcoming treatment. coming tastings.

They are a small group of people who will spend any amount to out-do each other in the depth and breadth of the wines they offer to their guests, but they are also gen-erous with their wines.

If one of the group lacks a certain bottle, say a 19th-century vintage in a tasting of Château Lafite, one of the other collectors will provide the bottle from his collection.

Unless, of course, he is planning an even grander Lafite tasting. The psychology of big-time wine collecting like this is special. The collector of Impressionist paintings. Directoire furniture or Bugatti automobiles is not all that different from lesser mortals, just richer and possibly possessed of some specialized knowledge. At some point, the carefully amassed treasures are sold (with luck, at a profit), and someone else becomes World-class wine collectors are a different breed; they systematically destroy what they have worked so hard and long to acquire.

In early October, Lloyd Flatt, a New Orleans collector, will put on a three-day tasting of Chateau Lafite-Rothschild that will rival and may well surpass any tasting that the château itself could provide.

Flatt's object this year is to offer as many Lafites as he can find: At last count he had found 70 vintages dating back to the 1830s, more than 60 years before the Rothschild family bought the Bordeaux vineyard and added their name to its title.

If more rare bottles turn up between now and October, Flatt will almost certainly acquire them, and at astonishingly high prices.

Not all wine collectors are so cavalier with their treasures. There are enthusiasts who pile up cases of rare wines the way misers hoard gold coins. They cannot possibly drink what they own; some in fact drink hardly at all. Still others acquire wine to trade; their connoisseurship is the handmaiden of profit. Like other commodities traders, these wine buyers may never see their bottles, preferring to leave them in a temperaturecontrolled warehouse, the better to sold 5 or 10 years later. When Flatt and 15 or 20 guests break for lunch after a morning of rare wines, they may well be served Reuben sandwiches accompanied by bottle after bottle of 1978 Le Montrachet, probably the rarest white wine in the world. "I kinda like the combination." Flatt said.

Marvin Overton, a Texas physician and friendly rival of Flatt. will invite his guests to tour his ranch and, out in the fields, serve a Bordeaux first growth from his Jeep.

Robert Paul, a Miami lawyer, will hold a tasting of all 61 classi-fied Bordeaux châteaux in the 1978 vintage. He will precede the event with a dinner at which he will serve 1978s from every other important wine region in the world. "Just as a frame of reference," he explained.

Were the truth to be known, a great many of the old wines consumed at dramatic tastings are not all that good. About 95 percent of the world's wine is consumed within a year after it is made. Good wines improve for five or 10 years, very great wines perhaps for 20. After that, they may become more interesting, and develop certain charming qualities, but rarely do they get better. Mostly, they begin

IF we have a tendency to be carried away by some of the nonsense about old wines, we have the Brit-

David Wolfe, an English restaurateur and wine chronicler, recently wrote: "The veneration of the overmature is, I believe, unique to this country, England, and not confined to wine. It is comparable to the adulation of 'Grand Old Men' in literature and the arts in general, where the attainment of senescence is thought to be a virtue in itself."

He went on to describe a brush with the living dead, enologically speaking, at a dinner in the 1960s. The wines included great Bor-deaux names from the 1950s back to the 1860s. "The vintages were good to excellent," he reported, "but the wines without exception were tawny to brown, with a smell combining compost with mushrooms.

"To make it worse, a torrent of appreciative babble greeted these faded beauties. I could only politely agree, but I was at least spared the horror of making the speech of thanks.

Smokey Robinson: Tracks of His Years

By Richard Harrington Washington Post Service

T HE one truly great moment at last year's Rock and Roll Hall of Fame dinner came when Smokey Robinson came out for his induction. The Waldorf-Astoria Ballroom was packed with record industry veterans and for much of the evening they'd been curiously sedate. But when Robinson walked onstage, they rose, en masse, clapping madly. Then, quite spontaneously, they started singing, sweetly, softly:
"Ooo Oooo Oooooo baby, baby. Ocoo Occoo Occooco baby, baby."

"That was an awesome mo-ment in my life." Robinson recalled. "I hate to admit this but I didn't even realize there was a Rock and Roll Hall of Fame until I'd been inducted."

Robinson didn't take it all in. he says, until that January night, when he realized "how all these people I was going to be in the Hall of Fame with were my idols — Jackie Wilson, Clyde McPhatter, Sam Cooke. It was incredi-

Introducing him, Brian Wilson recited Smokey Robinson's achievements—as the lead singer with the Miracles and the first real hitmaker for Motown; as songwriter and producer extraordinaire not only for the Miracles, but for the Temptations, Marvelettes. Mary Wells and others which led to Bob Dylan's famous remark that Smokey was "America's greatest living poet;" as a longtime Motown executive, and on and on. As Robinson was listening to all this, he says, he was thinking "how blessed, how fortunate I am, because here it's only the second annual dinner and I'm being inducted and all these other people who are there from this moment on have to wonder if in fact they're ever going to be in the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and I don't have to think about that!"

Smokey Robinson probably wouldn't have had to worry. Not with classics like "Shop Around,"
"You Really Got a Hold on Me." "Going to a Go-Go," "Ooo Baby Baby," "The Tracks of My

Tears," "I Second That Emo-tion," "The Tears of a Clown" and "More Love," all recorded with the Miracles. For the Temptations, he came up with "My Girl" (written for his young daughter). "The Way You Do the Things You Do' and "Get Ready." For Mary Wells, there was "My Guy," and for Marvin Gaye. "Ain't That Peculiar."

Like those songs — just some of the 1,500 he's written; another 3,500, he says, exist in various inges of development — Smokey Robinson has a timelessness about him. He's 48 now, but he looks younger than he did in 1972 when he retired from the Miracles and went through a three-year performing hiatus before returning as a solo artist. Unlike some singers. Robinson has never abandoned his past, and his concerts are full of hits.

"Some of those songs I sang thousands of times with the Miracles and since I've been a solo artist, and every time is like a new time for me. They all have a spe-cial place in my heart. I refer to them as my kids." he says.

Robinson's first song emerged when he was at Detroit's Dwyer Elementary School and contributed lyrics to a class musical. "I had written a few songs," he explains, "but I didn't think it would be anything serious in my life because at that time I wanted to be a baseball player."

With the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame behind him and a likely induction this year into the Songwriters Hall of Fame in New York, it's hard to imagine the time three decades ago. That's when Smokey Robinson was auditioning for a Jackie Wilson tour with the four Northern, High School buddies with whom he'd been performing at school func-tions and local dances as the Matadors. Rechristened the Miracles, they'd already been turned down by several labels. Then Berry Gordy Jr., who would become founder of the Motown Empire and was then a part-time producer and songwriter, expressed an interested in recording the Miracles. It was a fortunate encounsay, was built on Miracles.

The first Miracles recording "Got a Job," came out in 1958 and caused barely a ripple on the R&B charts. Another Robinson-Berry tune, "Bad Girl," came out a year later. Then another year went by before "Way Over There" came out on Gordy's own Tamla label, one of Motown's sis-ter labels. It became a minor regional hit.

The breakthrough came with "Shop Around," yet another Robinson-Gordy tune. But the song was rejected initially, so the Miracles decided to try it themselves. Gordy, a notorious perfec-tionist, called Robinson and the Miracles into a 4 A.M. recording session to punch up the rhythm. The new version became Gordy's first million-seller and first No. 1

Gordy and his inner circle, including Robinson, who was made a vice president of the company in 1963, created a pop assembly line and developed an enviable inhouse empire

As for Robinson, he was busy making Miracles hits and lending a helping hand — or song — to the rest of the Motown roster, usually writing for specific voices or per-sonalities for the next decade. Then in 1972, he left the Miracles, retiring at the age of 32. The road and the studio had taken their toll, not just on Robinson but on his wife Claudette, an original Miracle who'd retired in 1964 after eight miscarriages she blamed on the stress of her career. Their 27-year marriage ended amicably in 1986.

After three years of retirement. Robinson retired from the sidelines, returning as a solo act. By then, Motown itself had also gone through a major transition, abandoning Detroit for Los Angeles.

Like others in the Motown family, Robinson had resisted the move to California, partly for sentimental reasons as so many of the artists were Detroit natives, and partly because he was apprehensive about earthquakes. But now, he says, "I'm sorry Randy Newman beat me to that song, because I Love I.A. I can't think a solitary place in the entire world that I'd rather live."

He says of his songs: "They all have a special place in my heart."

Now, he gives frequent lectures to schools in towns where he's performing and his autobiogra-phy is scheduled this fall for publication by McGraw-Hill. And last year's "One Heartbeat" album produced the first back-toback Top 10 hits for Robinson (the title tune and the lovely "Just to See Her"). He says it's one of the best albums he's made, giving credit to the man who took charge and decided it was time for him to have another hit: Berry Gordy.

Robinson is ecstatic about the recent sale of Motown to MCA. Since the mid-'70s, Motown has proved unable to re-create its glory days, though it never went through a total dry spell. "We've always had people who sell googobs of records," Robinson says, listing Stevie Wonder, the Jackson Five, Lionel Richie and others. ers. But "we were spoiled by that earlier hit era, when we had several artists at all times on the charts.

It was a phenomenon." He adds:"I just marvel at the things that have happened be- just that.

cause of [Berry Gordy's] dream." As for his dreams of becoming a professional athlete, they didn't come true - but he managed to get his hits. And the dreams of his children, well, they are following their own. Daughter Tamla (named after the record label) wants to become a fashion designer in Paris, while Berry William Borope Robinson (the Borope comes from combining the first two letters of the other Miracles' first names) is studying marine biology and oceanography. "I also have a 4-year-old son and he's into him," he adds.

"They're outside of it." Robinson says of his older children, with a trace of relief. "They're involvement has just been that they're my children. My daughter plays flute and a little piano, my son plays a little more plano and guitar and bass. But he's not really into it; oceanography, that's what he wants to do. I asked him why and he said, Jacques Cousteau cannot live forever, Dad.'

Smokey Robinson's music, on the other hand, seems likely to do

Universal Will Release 'Last Temptation' Early

Universal Pictures will release Martin Scorsese's movie "The Last Temptation of Christ" Aug. 12, a month shead of schedule. Univer-sal, which co-produced "Last ! " Temptation" with Cineplex Odeon Films, has been assailed by religious fundamentalists and others who have denounced the film as blasphemous. "We have no way of defending the movie by what we say," said Thomas P. Pollock, the chairman of Universal, "This isn't rhetoric about the First Amendment. It doesn't mean anything for me to say that Martin Scorsese believes in this movie or feels it's a religious movie. The movie has to talk for itself."

Elle Wiesel, winner of the 1986 Nobel Peace Prize, has sent a telegram to Mikhail S. Gorbachev asking the Soviet leader to clear the names of 24 Soviet Jewish writers and other cultural figures who were killed under orders from Stalin 36 years ago this month. The 24, including poets, artists and scientists, had been charged with being "rebels" and "agents of American im-perialism" who wanted to separate the Crimea from the Soviet Union to "establish their own bourgeois national Zionist republic."

The Treasury Department is reportedly investigating whether the actor-director Robert Redford violated U.S. law during a three-day trip in May to Cuba. Redford described the visit as a script-writing workshop for women in Havana. Redford said he also met with President Fidel Castro. Scripps Howard News Service reported that Richard Newcomb, director of the Treasury enforcement office in Washington, asked Redford to explain whether he paid his expenses or whether they were paid by Cuba. A U.S. trade ban with Cuba bars all unlicensed economic transactions in which Cuba has an interest.

Lynne Cox, 32. an American endurance swimmer, says her plan to swim across huge Lake Baikal in Siberia this month is coming close to realization thanks to a recent flood of donations. Last year she swam 2.7 miles (4.3 kilometers) across the Bering Strait. She said that her prospects for swimming across the world's deepest lake improved in the last week when funds more than doubled to $25,000.
